Dear Senators Mikulski and Shelby:

On behalf of the Consortium for Citizens with Disabilities (CCD) Long-Term Services and Supports Task Force, we write to express our deep concern about language that appears in the House Appropriations Committee’s Report on the Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies Appropriations Bill and that we urge you not to include in the Senate Committee Report or the Conference Report. CCD is a coalition of national disability organizations working for national public policy that ensures the self-determination, independence, empowerment, integration and inclusion of children and adults with disabilities in all aspects of society.

The House Committee Report includes the following language concerning the Justice Department’s implementation of the Americans with Disabilities Act’s “integration mandate” and the Supreme Court’s Olmstead decision:

Deinstitutionalization.—The Committee notes the nationwide trend towards deinstitutionalization of patients with intellectual or developmental disabilities in favor of community-based settings. The Committee also notes that in Olmstead v. L.C. (1999), a majority of the Supreme Court held that the Americans with Disabilities Act does not condone or require removing individuals from institutional settings when they are unable to handle or benefit from a community-based setting, and that Federal law does not require the imposition of community-based treatment on patients who do not desire it. The Committee strongly urges the Department to factor the needs and desires of patients, their families, and caregivers, and the importance of affording patients the proper settings for their care, into its enforcement of the Americans with Disabilities Act.

We find this language highly troubling. The Olmstead decision has often been referred to as the Brown v. Board of Education of the disability community. Enforcement of the ADA’s integration mandate and the Olmstead decision is a top priority for the disability community.
The Justice Department’s Olmstead enforcement efforts in recent years have brought some of the most significant improvements to the lives of people with disabilities in decades. Thousands of individuals with disabilities have, for the first time, been given opportunities to live in their own homes and communities, with privacy, dignity, and independence. They have been able to participate as full members of society. The Justice Department’s enforcement efforts in this area have received overwhelming support from the disability community.

The language in the House Committee Report suggests that there is a problem with the Justice Department’s enforcement efforts and that the Department is promoting the discharge from institutions of individuals who are unable to live in a community setting, imposing community living on individuals who do not desire it, and failing to consider the needs and desires of individuals with disabilities and their families. These suggestions are entirely unfounded. To the contrary, every Justice Department Olmstead enforcement effort has sought community settings only for individuals who want them, and every one of the Department’s Olmstead settlements gives qualified individuals with disabilities the option of moving to an integrated setting.¹ No one is forced to move to a community setting against his or her wishes. Moreover, the Department has sought community settings for individuals who are qualified for such settings; every Department settlement includes a process for determining whether institutional residents could be served in community settings and affords relief to those determined eligible.

It is inappropriate for House or Senate Committee Reports to be suggesting that the Department of Justice slow down its efforts to enforce the rights of individuals with disabilities under the ADA and Olmstead, or that the Department has somehow forced community living on individuals contrary to their needs or desires. We urge you to ensure that this language is not repeated in the Senate Committee or Conference Reports.

Sincerely,
