June 13, 2012

The undersigned members of the Education Task Force of the Consortium for Citizens with Disabilities write today to share our objection to the extension of an amendment to the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) related to the definition of highly qualified teachers. We understand that this issue may be considered during this week’s full committee mark up of the FY 2013 Labor, Health, and Human Services, and Education (LHHS) appropriations bill.

The provision we oppose was included in the FY 2011 continuing resolution (CR) and amends the ESEA to allow teachers in the midst of their preparation to be called "highly qualified" teachers despite that fact that they are not fully prepared to be teachers. The regulation has been determined to be in violation of the statute by the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals and in May 2012 the Court reaffirmed its ruling. This inequitable distribution of unqualified teachers has a disproportionate impact on students with disabilities.

The ongoing lowering of standards related to highly qualified teachers will negatively impact students with disabilities. Research shows that students with disabilities thrive when receiving instruction from fully certified special education teachers. An Institute for Education Sciences study of all Florida teachers (Feng & Sass, 2010) found that fully certified special education teachers generate superior student learning gains as compared to special education teachers who are not fully certified. The current amendment has opened the floodgates for more and more uncertified special education teachers to serve students with disabilities.

We also know that more than half of students with disabilities participate in general education classrooms for 80 percent or more of the school day. General education teachers need additional preparation in order to ensure that they are skilled in working with students with disabilities. A few weeks of training is not enough preparation for a teacher to be skilled in utilizing universal design for learning, differentiating instructional strategies, managing challenging behaviors, preventing the use of restraint and seclusion, and providing educational supports to a diverse classroom – especially in our most underserved, under resourced schools. As more students with disabilities participate in general education classrooms, it is critical that all teachers have increased preparation and skill. Being an effective teacher for a student with autism or intellectual disabilities or learning disabilities requires sophisticated skill and is not mastered in a five week program.
We join a coalition of over 85 national advocacy organizations in our opposition to the continuation of this policy set forth in the fiscal year 2011 CR. We urge you to reject the inclusion of any amendment lowering standards for teachers in the LHHS appropriations bill.

Thank you for considering our views.

Sincerely,

ACCSES
Council for Exceptional Children
Easter Seals
Higher Education Consortium on Special Education
National Association of State Directors of Special Education
National Center for Learning Disabilities
National Council on Independent Living
National Disability Rights Network
National Down Syndrome Society
Teacher Education Division of the Council of Exceptional Children
The Advocacy Institute
The Arc of the United States
United Cerebral Palsy

The Consortium for Citizens with Disabilities is a coalition of nearly 100 national consumer, advocacy, provider and professional organizations headquartered in Washington, D.C. Since 1973, the CCD has advocated on behalf of people of all ages with physical and mental disabilities and their families. CCD has worked to achieve federal legislation and regulations that assure that the 54 million children and adults with disabilities are fully integrated into the mainstream of society. Approximately 50 national organizations participate in the CCD Education Task Force. For additional information, please contact:

Katy Beh Neas, Easter Seals 202.347.3066 kneas@easterseals.com
Laura Kaloi, National Center for Learning Disabilities 703.476.4894 lkaloi@ncld.org
Cindy Smith, National Disability Rights Network 202-408-9514 cindy.smith@ndrn.org